Induced hypothermia impairs immune function; nosocomial pneumonia will occur in over half of patients who are hypothermic for >7 days. Wound healing may be delayed and excellent nursing care is required to avoid the development of bed sores. However, with induced hypothermia for <24 h, pneumonias and bed sores are uncommon.

Targeted temperature management - Wikipedia

Targeted temperature management improves survival and brain function following resuscitation from cardiac arrest. Evidence supports its use following certain types of cardiac arrest in which an individual does not regain consciousness. Both 33 C (91 F) and 36 C (97 F) appear to result in similar outcomes.
